Letter from I. van Emden 25 May 55
20 Wilton Grove
Wimbledon London S.W. 19

Says has twice seen larvae of arrow poison beetles. Both batches discovered that a few had been destroyed by "parasite", the larva of a groundbeetle (Carabidae) of the group Lebiini.
The young larvae of these beetles are very active and seek out and ~~attack~~ attack a mature larva of some special Chrysomelid about to pupate. They attack this and gradually consume it, becoming very fat and unable to move about, so that they cannot attack a second host specimen.
When full grown they pupate in the cocoon of their host in the case of the arrow poison beetle.

The life history of these European and N. Am. species of these parasites is known, and the N. Am. form has been introduced into France to help in the control of the Colorado beetle. Altho the parasite of this beetle will be of little economic importance, I write to ask your help in finding out which species of ground beetles is this parasite. The parasite will probably be quite a pretty beetle - various ways to find it. One would be collect cocoons shortly before the poison beetles hatch and see if something strange is among the beetles. This requires someone on spot who is willing to trouble, keeping the cocoons wet too dry and not too moist, checking them every day or so. Simplest send cocoons to me by air I would open & try to get any parasite larvae to pupate & hatch on damp blotting paper. The specimens I have seen do for weeks dead. I think there was 1 ~~dead~~ specimen in 20 cocoons of the poison beetle.
